

AGENTS OF CHANGE: WOMEN EDITORS AND SOCIO-CULTURAL TRANSFORMATION IN EUROPE, 1710-1920

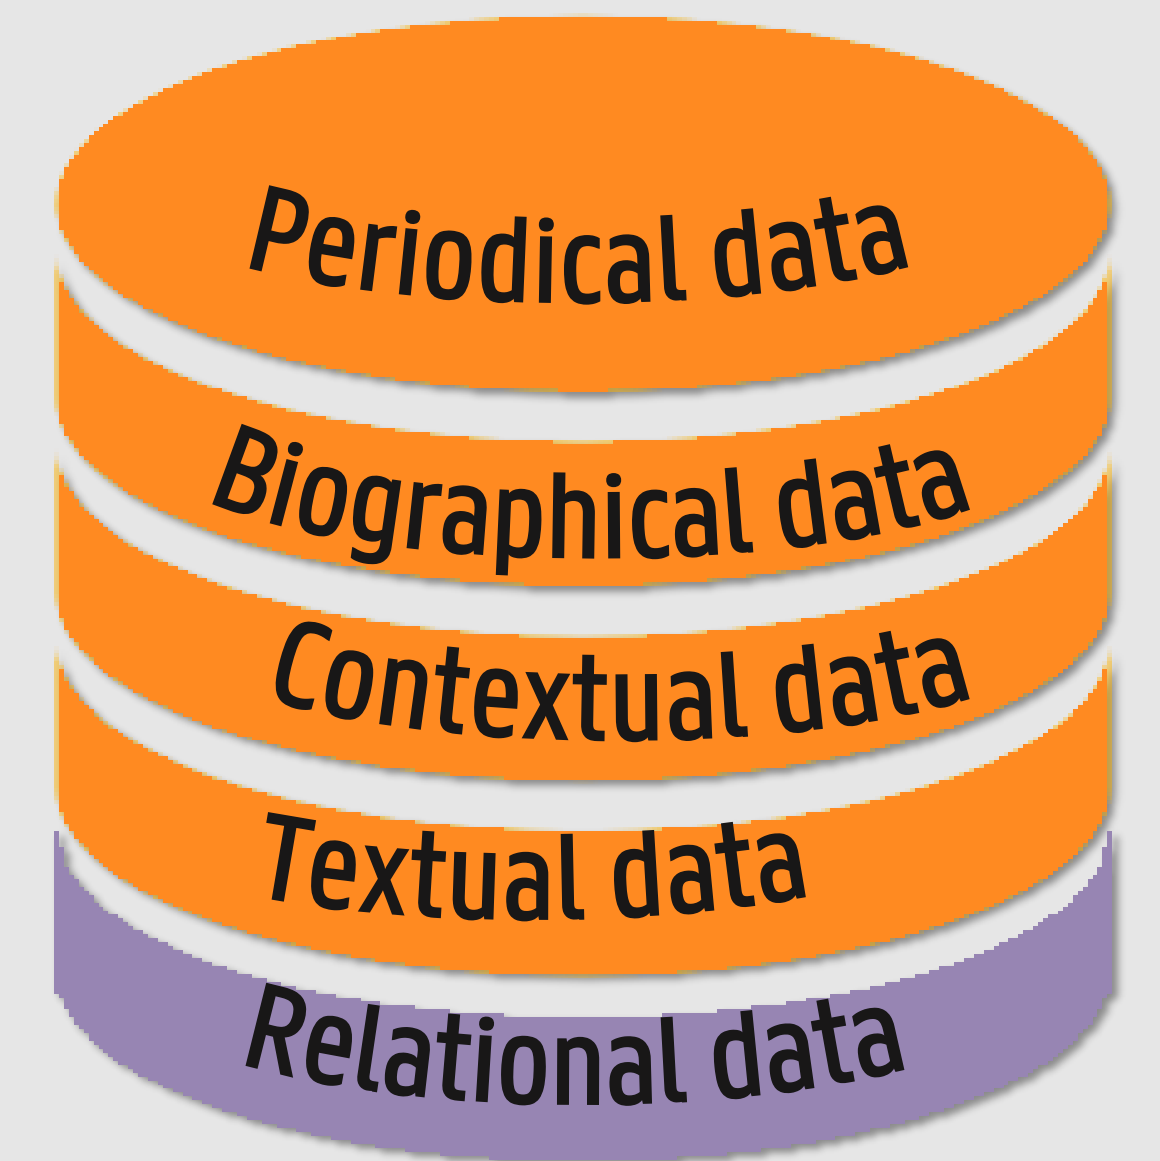

Periodical editorship enabled women to take a prominent role in public life, to influence public opinion and to shape transnational processes of change.

The network aspect of the project seeks to map the transnational networks of intellectual exchange in which women editors participated, with particular attention to practices of textual transfer (including translation, adaptation, reprinting and reviewing) across language boundaries and historical periods.

Results in qualitative and quantitative network analysis to compare contexts, time periods, individuals, and so forth.

The Network Project

- 1) A relational database of Linked Data in NodeGoat, sourced from archival data of women editors and their periodicals;
- 2) Mapping multi-modal networks:
 - a) editorofperiodical – periodical – contributor – contribution/item – textofcontribution – attributesof contributor – location – timeperiod
- 3) To analyze the characteristics of these relations.
- 4) Issues: small, dynamic, known missing data
